Wires

By Kiley Bronke

High school was for braces, For sparse dates to dances that wouldn't ask and never tell, only mask that they weren't going to ask you another fact you already knew:

that it's not about the braces or the times you could go back, the places you wouldn't go people, you'd never know.

Cause after you'd get them removed,
they'd start to move,

and the games you engaged had everything to do with the bargains you waged when you'd smile and force it to be seen for a high school hallway mile.
