The Stars Above Us

By Michael Jorgensen

A holy city in the sky, a canvas painted brightly.
The gaps of Heaven's peeking eye, unveiled to us nightly.

A midnight show in multitude, a portrait etched in time.

Crafted by an artist's hands, an artist of divine.
But hence a troubled audience, with backs turned in the dark.

Creating a calamity, with light and fire and spark.

And a burning of the souls of life, in nature's chamber hide.

Would we even notice, if the stars above us died?
