Seven

I feel so small against the weight of time.
The vastness of what You created here reminds me how I'm just another line
in this great expanse of poetry's sphere.
What am I to Your painted lilies?
Or to the jagged mountains rising high?
The rushing water cutting through the hilly terrain could swallow me with one strong try.
What significance have I to the Sun?
Or to the measured constellations' blaze?
The deep craters sinking into Moon's spun silver thread could wrap me for endless days.
But you kneel on bended knee to remind:
"I love you more than all of those combined"
