THIS YOUNG MAN was losing while he thought he was winning. His story is told in the nineteenth chapter of Matthew. The fact that he lost becomes all the more remarkable when we notice he was a respectable young man with high moral standards.

He possessed a good foundation of knowledge upon which to base his faith. He knew that this life doesn't end it all. He talked of eternal life, life beyond the grave, life that never ends.

He also recognized his personal responsibility and the possibility of finding the secret of eternal life. Hence his question, "What shall I do?"

He knew where to go, for he came to Christ, who alone has the words of eternal life. This young man came inquiring of Christ. He respected morality; he lived a good outward life. He came in humility of spirit and he came with a tender conscience, for after Christ pointed the way, he went away sad. His conscience was responsive to the message.

But he lost and apparently was lost because he loved wealth more than Christ. Christ will not share the first place in our affections. His requirement is, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." In the affections is where eternity's battles are fought. To put material things first in our affections is fatal here and hereafter. We cannot love God and mammon.

"If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (I John 2:15). And if our affections are wrong, our service, regardless of how pious it appears on the surface, will be wrong also. What we are in our hearts tends to work out into our deeds. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon" (Matthew 6:24).
I Went back home today to preach in the little church where Jesus Christ came to my heart with saving grace. It was the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary. My, how God blessed us and warmed our hearts!

I could not help noticing how things had changed since my youth. I had left that town of six or seven thousand people a few months after becoming a Christian, and a half a lifetime had intervened. The city blocks seemed shorter; the buildings seemed lower; the church building had been remodeled a bit but was substantially the same as when I attended. But the sanctuary seemed so much smaller than when I was a boy and had to go down the long aisle to reach the altar. The people had aged, too, but many of the very ones who had prayed for me were still there.

There was one thing that had not changed, however. The people still had the glory of God upon them. This was a holiness church indeed. Holiness radiated from their faces; it showed in their dress and demeanor; it proclaimed itself in their joyful singing; it was confirmed in their burdened praying; and it testified convincingly to all in a tender spirit of love and blessing that bound this group together in Christ. Any man could witness for himself that they "had been with Jesus" and His Spirit was abiding in them.

What a time I had trying to preach! My heart and eyes overflowed again and again as I tried to tell how the gospel that they had believed, that they had lived, and that they had taught me, had worked in my heart and life also. It was never hard for me to believe in a supernatural God who was all-powerful and ever-present.

This church where I "grew up" was filled with people who knew Him. They talked with Him on a personal basis; they walked with Him in an intimate relationship; they counted on Him caring for them in their time of need; and they attempted impossible exploits for His glory, knowing He would prove His promise true.

It had never been difficult for me to accept and believe the glorious truth of heart holiness, for it had been so wondrously demonstrated before me in the beautiful, sweet, triumphant life of my own mother and the others of this congregation.

When those old-fashioned preachers pointedly insisted God would cleanse the heart from all sin and make it pure, that the "old man" would be crucified when one really "died out," I never had difficulty in accepting it. The demonstration was before me in that saintly group that worshipped here.

This band of Christian witnesses were not much of a hand to point to a verse in the Bible, when working with souls seeking God, and say, "Believe." But they were stalwarts at keeping the "seekers" praying and digging and dying out.

When one came to the altar with a hungering heart, the "workers" believed it was their responsibility to keep him there until he "prayed through" and had the witness in himself. I can still remember those victorious scenes around the altar and the shouts and glory that very frequently attended them.

I have thought back often on those boyhood scenes since I have reached the mature years of life. The whole world has changed much, and the methods in church circles have altered somewhat as well. But the gospel we preach and the results achieved must be the same. There is no other way that will fully satisfy the soul and meet the needs of life but the way of holiness.

There are many cheap counterfeits being offered from the pulpit and in book form. They tickle the ear and make one feel comfortable in his half-hearted and self-filled way of professing to follow God. The results are most unsatisfactory and unconvincing and will be found wanting in the day of reckoning.

Those old-time saints that got me started on the road to heaven had the right interpretation of God's eternal Word. The way of holiness, which is the only way to heaven, demands with no compromise the confession and renunciation of sin, the death to self, and the cleansing of the heart and life of all that is unlike Christ, and the continual "walking in the Spirit." "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God" (Matthew 5:8).

I and my house will serve the Lord:
But first, obedient to His Word
I must myself appear:
By actions, words, and temper, show
That I my heavenly Master know.
And serve with heart sincere.
—Charles Wesley.

I Went HOME Today

NO QUESTIONS ASKED

IT WAS Sunday morning. No questions were asked. None was needed. Everyone knew the schedule and willingly followed it.

No one ever asked, “Where are we going today?”

To our church, of course! A neighboring congregation is having a good revival; there will be time to go to it when the doors of our church are not open. There is a homecoming at a friendly place of worship nearby; perhaps some of the returning old acquaintances will still be there when our services are over. A big, exciting somebody is preaching in a nearby city; we shall plan to go one night next week.

Fishing? To the beach? To school or club activities that involved the weekend? Such inquiries were never made.

No one ever asked, “Shall we go to church this morning?”

Everyone knew that the family Chevy left for church at nine-thirty every Sunday morning, and everyone was ready.

Diligent preparations had been made previously. Extra baking was done; food was made as ready as possible on Saturday. Shoes had been thoroughly cleaned and polished. The best clothing had been brushed and pressed. During the week the Sunday school lesson had been studied together at family worship.

No one asked, “Who is going to church?”

Only sickness kept any member of the family from services. Company did not do it. Visitors who came on that day had learned that, if they did not go along, they stayed home alone.

No one ever came to the house to transact any business; everyone knew that none of the family would be there during church hours. Besides that, any acquaintance recognized that here no secular concerns were considered on the Lord’s day. Word went around about that father who would forfeit money rather than his convictions!

No one ever asked, “How many services shall we attend this Sunday?”

Mother and Father had been attending Sunday school all their lives. Every child began going when he was three weeks old. From choice, no one was going to start missing today. Certainly, all were staying for church. Everyone member of the family heartily participated in the singing of the hymns and gospel songs, even when some were too young to get either the words or tunes correct. The pastor’s messages were from the Word. They helped people to God and built up and instructed the Christians.

The N.Y.P.S., Hi-N.Y., juniors, prayer meeting—something for all ages—preceded the evening preaching service.

None would think of missing that evangelistic meeting. The Lord often visited with special outpourings then. Who would want to be absent from the altar service when folks prayed through and great joy and lift came to all? Yes, Sunday night in our church was often what Mamie B. Hendricks calls “Glory Night.”

No one ever asked, “Was it a good day?”

It may have been tiring, but it was satisfying and unifying. The family thanked God for it.

The Cover . . .

The third Sunday of October has come to be observed throughout the church world as “Laymen’s Sunday.” Christian laymen are the leaven who help to preserve the great mass of mankind from the corruption of evil by their very presence and participation in the work of the world. Laymen are the church in being, not just one Sunday a year, but every Sunday and every day. A small sampling of the laymen of the Church of the Nazarene interpret their life and faith on these pages.

IT HAS truthfully been said, “Christ alone can save the world.”

But with equal emphasis we can say, “Christ cannot save the world alone.” Christ’s sacrifice on Calvary is complete. Ours can be made effective through the Thanksgiving Offering as we link our efforts with Him in worldwide evangelism.

By SYLVAN F. STARKS
Nazarene Layman, Neodesha, Kansas

When Jesus then lifted up his eyes, and saw a great company come unto him, he said unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat? And this he said to prove him: for he himself knew what he would do (John 6:5-6).

WE USUALLY THINK of the feeding of the five thousand as a challenge to consecrate our “puny” gifts or talents, so that the Lord may multiply them for the advancement of His kingdom. This is certainly a fair application. We wouldn’t want to detract from its significance.

However, one of the priceless blessings of the Scriptures is that many applications may be made bringing out particular lessons for particular needs at particular times.

Mark’s account tells us that Jesus “was moved with compassion” when He saw the multitude, “because they were as sheep not having a shepherd” (6:34). In recent days there is increasing evidence of a general awareness throughout our denomination that we are on the threshold of a peculiar and rare opportunity to thrust in the sickle for a bountiful harvest of souls.

World conditions have brought on a restlessness among church leaders of all faiths, sparking a desire to unite their spiritual, social, and material resources in the face of the threat of godless Communism and materialism. This in turn has aroused a great multitude of “nominal” Christians to begin analyzing their personal convictions and standards; and the result is a growing awareness of a need for spiritual strength and stability that they have been unable to obtain before.

But how are we going to feed them? It seems that most of our Nazarene churches are either in a building program or realizing a need to launch another. We are a growing church to the extent that we are a witnessing church. But we limit our growth to a large extent by our lack of faith in our planning and building.

There were three typical replies to this question, and I believe that you—as an average Nazarene like myself—may be able to find yourself in one of these categories. These are three negative attitudes which unconsciously influence our cooperation, participation, and enthusiasm in promoting and expanding the Kingdom through the media of physical facilities, or buildings.

(1) Looking at our current resources

Philip probably remembered Judas’ treasurer’s report at their last “board meeting,” so his first reaction was to make a flat statement of finality that “two hundred pennyworth” was “not sufficient” even to start such a project. To him, the issue was a settled matter! He failed to consider that faith begins only where human resources end. Like the steward who hid his master’s talent, he concluded it was better to keep what you have than to risk your future on something so “impossible” and “unnecessary.”

(2) Looking to the human potential

Andrew probably started scanning the fringe area of the multitude which surrounded the group of disciples, when he spotted the lad with the five barley loaves and two fishes. Calling the lad into the circle, he raised a counter question, “But what are they among so many?”

Andrew went a little farther than looking to the current bank balance, but could see little wisdom in appropriating this puny potential in the face of such a tremendous need. “Yes, Pastor, we have a little surplus in our treasury; and we have five members who make a pretty fair salary, plus two wealthy friends of the church—but what are they among so many?”

(3) Indifference

I can see the loving eyes of Jesus turning from Philip to Andrew, and then to the other disciples for their replies; but none from the rest is recorded. I wonder if the other disciples clucked their heads, shrugged their shoulders, and said (or implied), “We didn’t invite them here. Why should we worry about how they are fed? We have enough obligations of our own without taking on something as impractical as that! Why should we get excited about those spiritually hungry church members out there? They have churches with plenty of space, and empty pews. Why should we go deeper.
in debt to enlarge our facilities for them? We just can't do it!"

How soon we forget the miracle-working power of God!

Those disciples had witnessed many remarkable miracles, beginning with the wedding at Cana, but apparently these were all forgotten in the pressures of this new crisis. Moses was no exception to our human inclinations when he remonstrated with God over the problem of feeding that great host of Israelites in the wilderness. In spite of many glorious miracles, so recently in his experience, Moses—like Philip and Andrew—questioned: "Shall the flocks and the herds be slain . . . or shall all the fishes of the sea be gathered together for them, to suffice them?" (Numbers 11:22) And then the Lord answered, "Is the Lord's hand waxed short?" (v. 23)

Is the Lord's hand waxed short today? Is He really the same "yesterday, and to day, and for ever"? Oh, how conservative we are in our faith, but how liberal He is with His miracles!

Jesus multiplied the potential on the mountainside that day, with plenty to spare. The twelve baskets of fragments were not a waste, but a demonstration that “he is able to do exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think”! If we will exercise faith, and provide the channels and facilities, the Lord will not only add "to the church daily," but will multiply this potential to the ministering to spiritual needs of the community and of the whole wide world!

Yes, a growing church is a witnessing church—at home and abroad—through the multiplying of the potential. An increased membership means increased finances, and increased giving to missions. It means an increase in witnessing locally, and by those who are called into Christian service. Multiplied potential!

Finally, the key to definite, positive success in building for the Kingdom is found in the third word of Jesus' question, "Whence shall we buy bread?" It is not, How are you going to do it—but, How are we going to do it? We are laborers together with Him. Glorious thought! How prone we are to leave this promise out of our thinking when "impossible" situations arise—even in planning church building programs.

Let's think big—plan big—and expect big things from God as we work with Him in the building of His kingdom.

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night." (Psalm 1:1-2)

THE United States Forest Service, my employer for many years, spends large sums each summer training young men to fight fire. We used to call them smoke chasers. One of the primary points brought out in these training programs is the importance of killing a fire while it is small, which is practically the only time it is easily controlled. Once having reached project proportions, little can be done until it burns to a mountain ridge or other barrier.

There are both similarities and differences between fire in the forest and what is called "spiritual fire." Both are all-consuming. Our God, we are told, "is a consuming fire," but this is a benevolent action in which only the hindering elements of life are destroyed.

In the forest, the smoke chaser is trained never to despise the tiniest spark or the most infinitesimal wisp of smoke still emanating from a supposedly dead fire. He is required to remain for six hours on his fire after the last tiny spark has been killed. Often he would like to turn his back upon a single tattletale thread of smoke struggling from the wet ash heap and go home to a warm bath and a soft bed, but he doesn't dare!

In this respect, the fires of the Spirit are exactly opposite to those of the forest. We want the spiritual fire to burn, and if we turn our backs, it often
I am afraid we Christians sometimes too easily turn away from a feebly kindled fire around our altars and say, at least in effect: "Well, that's fine; but it really doesn't amount to much. Only two children came to pray."

Recently my wife and I attended a worship service in a small community where our Nazarenes worship in an exquisite little building in a fine location. We had been there a year previous and there were probably seventy-five worshipers. (The Sunday school average this year is seventy-five, which is excellent for such a small village.)

The pastor and his wife are young, the parents of six children. He supplements his salary by working forty hours per week. The abrasive drain upon his energy must be considerable.

We were unavoidably late for Sunday school, and the pastor was teaching an adult class. When the service began, this class proved also to comprise the choir, with the pastor's wife as the instrumentalist, and the pastor as director.

There were seven people in the audience beside three or four children. Later we learned that numerous causes had prevented the attendance of a considerable number who ordinarily would have been present.

With such an almost infinitesimal congregation a stranger might expect an atmosphere of complete informality. Evidently some of the children took such information for granted, and the nursery, an adequate, sunny room near the front of the building, also contributed, periodically, an informal note.

But Pastor John Metcalf conducted his service throughout as though there were five hundred people present. The choir, under his able direction, did a fine job. The special singer, a teen-ager with a clear, sweet voice, sang "I Know Who Holds My Hand," and tiptoed out of the sanctuary. I think she tended the nursery.

Then with that strange, quiet unction of the anointed heart, Brother Metcalf preached from the familiar writing of Isaiah: "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts" (6:5).

Frequently children moved about and occasionally a baby cried, but Brother Metcalf did not seem to hear. After forty hours of his week in a noisy automobile parts establishment, he probably didn't notice the disturbance.

"Isaiah, a man of God, as you, beloved, are people of God, found himself undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts" (6:5).

Almost as soon as the altar call was made, a fine young woman came and knelt, quickly followed by others—all adults—until almost the entire congregation knelt at that altar, praying for each other and for themselves—it really didn't matter which. Each sought that live coal from off the altar of which Isaiah spoke.

Yes, John Metcalf had conducted his service as though there were five hundred present instead of only a few. But why shouldn't he, with God and all of heaven looking on?

I am sure we miss it sometimes because we "despise the fire" when it is small. We should never do it!

ON THE CARE AND USE OF THE MINISTER'S WIFE

By DOROTHY S. HAMPTON
Pastor's Wife, Jackson, Tenn.

A FRAIL, silver-haired woman slipped her trembling arm about my shoulders and looked at me enviously. In a tender tone she said, "It must be wonderful to be a minister's wife."

I didn't feel pleasant, for it was a busy, scorching camp meeting day. But I forced a little smile and said, "Yes, it is."

Since then I've pondered her statement. It is wonderful to be a minister's wife if one is true to herself, uses her talents and capabilities for God, and doesn't try to be someone else. And if she finds God's pattern for her life and lives by it, instead of trying to fit patterns designed by others. Shakespeare said:

"This above all: to thine own self be true,"
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou cannot then be false to any man.

For years I tried to please others. I'd wear my hair long for Mrs. A. Then I'd trim it for Mrs. B. Next I'd put a rinse on it to please Mrs. C. Finally I'd shampoo with nothing but Octagon soap to make Mrs. D. happy. At last (when I feared baldness and hadn't accumulated the juice of a wig), I did it the way I thought might please God. Isn't it ridiculous that so often we seek to please Him lastly?

But, anyway, like the air conditioner and the washing machine, the minister's wife performs best (and might not "conk out" so soon) when people consider the following rules:

Rule 1. Don't compare her with other ministers' wives. Like everyone else she has inborn traits and strength (or lack of strength) that helps determine her capabilities and limitations. And, because of unfortunate backgrounds, some are more limited than others. But one isn't to blame, neither to be credited, for her birthright.

It's understandable how Mrs. E., reared in a well-to-do, educated, Christian home might be more capable that Mrs. F., who was reared in different circumstances. Yet if Mrs. F. has developed her potential and is doing her best for God, she is as pleasing to Him as Mrs. E., and she should be to the laity.

Our husbands didn't say, "Well, dear, since your parents aren't Christians I can't love you, even though you are a Christian." Or, "Since you aren't rich, I don't want you."

In fact, mine didn't even ask if I had a piggy bank, nor did he ask, "Can you bake a cherry pie quick as I can bat my eye, Dorothy, dear?" (I can't—even in the length of time it takes him to preach a sermon, and that's—)

At any rate, many ministers' wives "mount up with wings as eagles" and soar above unfortunate backgrounds and become tremendous blessings. "Little is much if God is in it."

For instance: Mrs. G. wasn't privileged to study music, so she doesn't play musical instruments or sing specials. She's not a forceful speaker, nor an exceptional teacher. But she's neat and attractive and keeps her house tidy. She's kind, considerate, and pleasant. Mrs. G. visits much and prays and with the needy, and she works around the altar. She entertains well. One day she said to me, "But there are so many, many things I can't do, Dorothy."

I reminded her of the various other things she does superbly. In her own unassuming way she's a real blessing.

The Apostle Paul said, "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord" (Corinthians 12:4-5).

If your minister's wife can't play a musical instrument, sing, speak in public gatherings, or teach as well as another, it doesn't mean she isn't consecrated. The Spirit is unrestricted. Maybe she's a prayer warrior. Perhaps she excels in personal work: maybe she calls untiringly on the sick and aged and shut-ins.

Rule 2. Don't expect your "Queen of the Parsonage" to hold open house twenty-four hours a day seven days a week. Most ministers' wives welcome brief visits from the laity, and parsonages should always be open to the needy. But no minister's wife enjoys being visited so much that it hinders her work, her responsibilities to her family, and her devotional life.

Rule 3. The parsonage should not be a hotel. No dedicated pastor's wife minds helping entertain visiting evangelists, missionaries, and others on official business. And the amount of entertaining varies with the size and financial status of the church. But I haven't met that woman who wants to house and feed every group that comes along. Should she be expected to do so?

Concerning parish entertaining, in Far Above Rubies, Mrs. G. B. Williamson said: "To single out individual families or groups and invite them to the parsonage home (for meals) simply because of mutual attraction may pave the way for misunderstanding and regret."

In my sixteen years as a preacher's wife, to my knowledge, only one laywoman has criticized me publicly. (Maybe there were more private whispers over cups of Sanka.) Not once, though, has anyone tried to "shake well before using," nor has one tried to "pry lid off with a dull knife" (though I might have needed it).

I've been given many surprise birthday parties, and many gifts of appreciation, plus lovely cards and words of kindness. And guess who gave most of them? Yes, the laity!

Then why did I write this article? I felt prompted to. Maybe one woman somewhere has forgotten that she should not compare ministers' wives, should not expect her pastor's wife to hold open house twenty-four hours a day, and should not think of the parsonage as a hotel. Or maybe I'm wrong. Maybe everyone remembers. I hope so!
A layman describes his reaction to the all-night of prayer which has taken place the first Saturday night of each month for the past four years

MY HOUSE
Shall Be Called the House of Prayer

By KELLY LEIGH, Layman, Nampa, Idaho

THIS IS SATURDAY NIGHT. The place is Nampa, Idaho. The scene is the First Church of the Nazarene. And on they come, these faithful, called out in the middle of the night to kneel at an altar below a victoriously shining cross.

One by one, two by two, they come to bolster and undergird the church they love—to undergird and fortify and renew their own faith. Quietly they come now, looking at the bare cross and giving thanks to God that this beautiful cross, so removed from the crude one on which their Lord was crucified, is bare and does not hold the broken body of the Saviour. And they realize that herein lies the victory of the Cross, for it has yielded up its risen Lord.

Young and old, still they come—not many, just a continual contingent of those who would seek out Christ's will in their lives. A casual observer might watch and make a mental note that this might be comparable to the changing of the guard. And this wouldn't be too far off, for here in prayer at the altar is the true guardian of the faith.

They come from all walks of life—the shopkeeper, the farmer, the truck driver, the student, the young and the old—all satisfying their basic need of replenishing their vessel of faith at the fountain of prayer. Some are dressed in their Sunday best; some in their skinny-jeaned spikes; some in faded jeans; some in their skinny-heeled slippers. But all come with one common denominator—they have come to seek Jesus. They are here, not because Pastor Lee has asked them to come, but they come out of a compulsion, a desire to meet face-to-face their Master. They come believing that this night they will find Jesus now!!

Then as they find Him here, they will go away, having found the Balm of Gilead, the cool and cleansing water that will flow out, over, and through the arid desert of their souls. This very night they have shared with Moses the striking of the rock, for they have reached out and have found the quiet cleansing from the Rock himself, even Christ our Lord.

Sometimes during this night it is so quiet one could hear a pin drop; other times there will be those who pray not, but listen to Dr. Fitz as he moves from Nampa on a spiritual jet to take in all the mission fields, and to carry to the altar all the problems of the world. To some this may have been a reason for their getting out of a nice, comfortable, warm bed, just to hear this man of God express his deep and convincing faith that God does hear our supplications.

God has been in First Church this night. The Holy Spirit has been here. These who have come have brought their burdens to the Cross; they have brought them there, not to pick them up again, but to walk out into the cool, fresh air in perfect peace.

Some have had a trying week; problems seem to have had summit proportions. But now these summit problems have been reversed and have become mountaintop experiences in the Lord, for they have been laid at the altar, buried in Christ, washed in the blood of the Lamb.

Were you not there this night? Oh! What a pity! For you missed a rich and rewarding experience. Yes! You missed being with Jesus this night.

Paul introduces himself in the environment of grace, as an object of grace, mercy, and love; himself lost to sight in the marvels of redeeming grace. He speaks of himself to emphasize the greatness of the gospel of God. He says, "I am Paul; listen while I tell you the wonders of redeeming love; look while I lift the curtains, and you, too, shall see the heavenly vision." There was but one great fact in the universe for this man who had been created anew; it was Christ from heaven; Christ on the cross; Christ in the resurrection; Christ on the throne; Christ in the heart; Christ coming again. The great central fact with him was, Christ in me the hope of glory.—Selected.
LAYMEN’S SUNDAY: OCTOBER 18

A Preacher’s Prayer for His Laymen...

“I thank God for you Christians—whenever I think of you. My constant prayers for you are a real joy, for they bring back to my mind how we have worked together for the Gospel from the first. I feel sure that the One Who has begun His good work in you will go on developing it until the Day of Jesus Christ.

“It is only natural that I should feel like this about you all—you are very dear to me... we shared together the grace of God... My prayer for you is that you may have still more love—a love that is full of knowledge and wise insight. I want you to be able always to recognize the highest and the best, and to live sincere and blameless lives full of true goodness produced by the power that Jesus Christ gives you to the praise and glory of God... Your generosity is like a lovely fragrance, a sacrifice that pleases the very heart of God. My God will supply all that you need from His glorious resources in Christ Jesus. And may glory be to our God and our Father for ever and ever. Amen!”

—from Paul to the Philippians (Phillips’ translation)
ON SUNDAY, OCTOBER 18, Protestant churches throughout the world will give special recognition to “the man in the pew.” Without his loyalty, “the man in the pulpit” cannot accomplish his task.

Laymen’s Sunday affirms the Protestant position on the “Priesthood of Believers” and gives testimony with Peter: “Ye also . . . are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ” (1 Peter 2:5).

The gap between the world and the Church cannot be bridged by the minister alone. He must have by his side—bearing witness to the efficacy of his message—the faithful layman, redeemed and radiant.

Together, they face a complex and a confused world with the message of hope. Together, they pray: “Help us to use Thy gifts to spread Thy peace; give us Thy Spirit, Lord. Our love increase.”

Laymen and the Reformation

October is a month in which there are two special Sundays. The third Sunday of the month has come to be known as “Laymen’s Sunday” throughout the church world. The last Sunday of the month commemorates the beginning of the Protestant Reformation with the nailing of Martin Luther’s ninety-five “theses” to the door of the Castle Church in Wittenberg, October 31, 1517.

There is a very close connection between these two days. The Reformation did much for Christendom that is rather widely known. One of its less well-known values was to break down the hard and fast wall between the clergy and the laity. This is summarized in the phrase, “the priesthood of all believers,” in which it is stressed that every Christian may come directly to God without the mediation of church or clergy.

One of the problems is that this wall of separation between clergy and laity will not stay broken down. It tends to rise again, half unconsciously perhaps, but really nonetheless. When it does, the church is cursed with a professionalized ministry and a secularized laity.

THERE IS A DIFFERENCE, of course, between minister and layman. That difference is a divine call which the church recognizes with license and ordination. It is a real difference and must not be ignored. God calls some men and women to devote their whole time to the ministry of the Word. Their lifework is to preach the gospel, and they do it with the inner imperative expressed by the Apostle Paul, “Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!”

Such a calling has rights which the layman should respect. And such a calling has responsibilities which the layman may expect his pastor to face and fulfill. Likewise there are rights and responsibilities in being a lay member of the church. There are effective cooperation and service only when these mutual rights and responsibilities are respected.

Still the difference between sacred and secular is never absolute. A task normally sacred may be done in a secular manner, as when a sermon is preached to build the reputation of the preacher. On the other hand, a task normally secular may become sacred, as when Jesus washed the feet of His disciples, the lowly task of a domestic servant in that day.

One of the modern translations puts Colossians 3:23 in a sharp new light: “Whatever your task, work heartily, as serving the Lord and not men.” As Stephen Winward put it, “Not only preaching a sermon, but addressing a political meeting; not only breaking bread at the Eucharist, but breaking stones to make a road; not only kneeling to pray, but kneeling to scrub the kitchen floor, can be done to the glory of God.”

Brother Lawrence, remembered for his phrase, “The Practice of the Presence of God,” said that the sanctity of the entire life of the Christian is not so much a matter of changing the kind of work we do as it is doing for the Lord’s sake what we commonly do for our own.

THERE IS HIDDEN WISDOM in the very word we use to describe the work by which people make their living. It is their “vocation,” we say—a term which means “calling.” Perhaps not all can have work which is in itself inspiring and fulfilling. But any honorable work can be hallowed if the Christian does the ordinary task that has to be done and does it to the glory of God.

The vocation of the layman extends to the church as well as to his daily tasks. There are other contributions church members can make besides money. The pastor would be expected to be a better theologian than the layman. But by the same token the layman may be the better businessman. That church is indeed wise which uses the skills, the know-how, of all its people in the work of the Lord.

From the very beginning, the Church of the Nazarene has provided a large place for the layman in its government and work. Ministers and laymen in equal numbers make up district and general boards and the General Assembly. While key responsibility is delegated to the local pastor, the ultimate authority is vested in the congregation as a whole and its elected representatives. Wherever this balance is upset or threatened, there is trouble ahead.

ONE OF THE MOST ENCOURAGING SIGNS in recent years is the opening up of lay occupations within the church. In music, in college teaching and religious education leadership, in publication, in youth work, in church administration, and even in overseas service, there are coming to be more and more jobs to which laymen can give their full time.

The trend toward early retirement and longer active life provides many opportunities for lay service in the church. A pension or partial pension together with lessened expenses in raising a family or buying a home helps to offset or reduce the cost to the church of valuable experience and time which can be used in many areas of its work.

In observing both Laymen's Sunday next Sunday and Reformation Sunday the following week, let us not forget the challenge of the Reformation to the layman to think in terms of his every moment as part of his larger "vocation." There is much to think about in the words of Dr. J. B. Chapman, written almost forty years ago:

"Practically all the spiritual movements of history have been marked by the large place which 'the people' occupied in the services and in the general activities of the Church; and the less spiritual a movement becomes the more completely the pastor and other leaders absorb the time."

On the Samoan tape you hear the Samoan congregation atPago Pago singing.

APPROVED OVERSEAS SPECIALS

The General Budget is the lifeline for both our home and foreign missionary program. However, there are usually some very worthy needs which, because of limited funds, cannot be included in the approved budgets for the various fields.

On the overseas home mission fields, some of these needs are authorized by the general superintendents and General Board as approved specials, for individuals or churches who want to give for a particular need over and above the regular budget. Contributions toward these specials receive credit in the 10 percent program of missionary giving.

The following are approved specials for overseas home missions. If you are interested in contributing towards any of these, write to the Department of Home Missions, 6101 The Pasco, Kansas City, Missouri 64131. More detailed information will be sent upon request.

Rev. Wallace Jones preaches in the sign language to his congregation, meeting in First Church, Aurora, Illinois. Mr. Jones, who is also deaf, ministers to many deaf people throughout the greater Chicago area, both in services and by visits to homes. This work is sponsored by the Chicago Central District, with assistance from the Department of Home Missions.
Out from Nazarene Bible Institute near Charleston, West Virginia, are coming the young ministers who are leading our Negro churches in outstanding gains. These men are called of God, trained in the Word, filled with the Spirit, and carry a burden for souls. Eight graduates are now pastorizing churches, but we could use eight more without starting another new church!

Nazarene Bible Institute is supported by the General Budget. Rev. R. W. Cunningham, the president, and Rev. Clarence Bowman, dean, are doing an outstanding job with few resources.

Fifty dollars in the Thanksgiving Offering will take care of the operating expenses of the school (not including salaries or property) for half a week. Let your money speak in the training of these desperately needed ministers.

The Thanksgiving Offering is part of your General Budget "lifeline" giving for world evangelism. The article above shows one of the ways in which your General Budget works for you in spreading the gospel around the world.

Report on Cathy Seely

Cathy was admitted into the Children’s Hospital in Columbus, Ohio, August third for traction. After a week they performed a minor surgery to elongate muscles, then returned her to traction. Yesterday the doctor told us that there is definite progress.

We are happy with Cathy’s adjustment to this hospital experience. Doctors and nurses tell us that she sings, watches TV, and doesn’t seem to get too lonely. This is a miracle for a three-year-old girl. We praise the Lord, for we feel He is helping her and us through this difficult time.—VINCENT STEFY.

Assembly Time, 1964

By BOYD and NEVA SKINNER

Chile

This is our second year with representatives from Chile in the assembly. Our delegation is composed of two young people, Brother Juan Tancara of Putre-Socoroma, and the missionaries. The shelter walls of the old corral protect us from the wind, and let us feel the full rays of the sun in the wintry time of the Andes Mountains. On Sunday, when more than five hundred people gather in, the flaps have to come down. The afternoon missionary service will be long remembered. The great message of Dr. Cochran touched dozens of hearts as they dedicated their lives to carry forth the gospel to the millions who have not yet heard. There is great joy as God’s children come together from the lowland jungles, the high barren plains of Bolivia, and the desert of northern Chile. Forward we must march!

THE BIBLE LESSON
By NELSON G. MINK
Topic for October 18:
Qualifications of Church Officers

SOURCES: I Timothy 3:8-13; 5: Titus 1:5-9 (Printed: I Timothy 3:1-13) GOLDEN TEXT: Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine (I Timothy 5:17).

The church will always be in need of responsible leadership: sound in doctrine, straight in spiritual thinking, ethical in life and practice. A high school senior in his testimony one night said, "This is the most ethical in life and practice. A high school senior in his testimony one night said, "This is the highest that I have ever known."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

I read with interest the article "The Working Elements in the Church," and I would like to add a few comments.

First, I would like to commend you for your efforts to promote the work of God. As a minister, I have seen firsthand the importance of the "working elements" in the church. They are the backbone of our ministry and are essential to the success of our work.

Second, I would like to express my appreciation for the work of the "working elements." They are often overlooked and underappreciated, but their contributions are invaluable.

Finally, I would like to encourage all of our members to support the work of the "working elements" by volunteering their time and talents.

Sincerely,

John Doe

Day of Evangelism in Kankakee

Gedardale Camp, Pefferlaw, Ontario, executive with General Motors Corporation in attendance, was an outstanding success, with an attendance of 165 men from 38 churches in attendance.

Mr. Harlan Heimiller of Detroit, Michigan, was the speaker. He is an executive with General Motors Corporation, and was reelected a lay member of the General Board of the Church of the Nazarene at the General Assembly in Portland. The gathering was held at Cedardale Camp, Pefferlaw, Ontario, Canada.

Seminary Building Being Finished

Work has been started to complete the end of the Nazarene Theological Seminary building which had been left unfinished in the original plans to allow for the addition of a library wing. The Seminary board of trustees has decided to build the library as an independent building connected by a covered walkway, rather than as an addition to the present structure.

A small amount of added space will be provided which will accommodate two faculty offices and two seminar rooms; and space for storage and the caretaker’s equipment. The addition will bring the library in the corner of 63rd Street and Woodland Avenue and the development of interconnecting drives and parking areas are bringing the International Center in Kansas City one step nearer its final form.

The bookstore will be dedicated and opened to the public during the meeting of the General Board, January 18-20, 1965. Space now occupied for book sales at 29th and Troost will be converted to other publishing house uses.

Nazarene Nursery Literature Standard for Armed Forces

The nursery literature developed by the Department of Church Schools and published by the Nazarene Publishing House has been adopted as part of the unified Protestant religious education curriculum for the United States armed forces.

This means that Nazarene material will be used in nursery age classes in all chapel Bible schools and in the programs of the Protestant chaplains of the armed forces here and abroad.

Trevcca Students Recovering from Crash Injuries

The automobile accident which took the life of Trevecca College student Esther Charlene Hyatt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer C. Hyatt, of Jacksonville, Florida (Herald Late News, September 23), resulted in serious injuries to three other Trevecca girls in the same car, who are reported to be recovering satisfactorily.

The four girls were returning to Florida after a visit to Nashville in August when their car went out of control as a result of a tire blowout, and rolled over three times. Mary Frances Buckner, of Leesburg, Florida, was hospitalized for ten days; and Miss Mary Meighan, of Hialeah, Florida, was in the hospital for about fifteen days.

Most seriously injured was Miss Mary Louise Stanistreet, of Holly Hill, Florida, who is expected to be released from the hospital in Auburn, Georgia, near the scene of the accident, about the middle of this month.

Offset Press Being Installed

A new Michel “web” offset press is now being installed at the Nazarene Publishing House and is expected to be ready for its first use about November 1. The new press is the first of its kind in the Midwest, and embodies some revolutionary new advances in lithograph printing.

The press prints from huge rolls of paper, but incorporates a number of features which have before been possible only with slower presses printing on sheets of paper. It is capable of two-color work up to 57,000 copies per hour. Thirty tons of air conditioning are required to cool the rollers, and a new thirty-foot tower stack has been erected to carry off fumes.

The press will be used to print the Herald of Holiness, Sunday school papers, and the Other Sheep, although full use of the new equipment is not expected until early next year.

Priest Urges More Stress on Bible by Catholics

St. Louis (EP) — Sacred Scripture is not the dynamic force it should be in the spiritual life of Roman Catholics, a Bible expert told delegates to the twenty-fifth annual Liturgical Week.

Father Thomas Leaver, chaplain of the Kansas City Art Institute, said that prayer is conversation with God and thus can rightfully be compared with the dialogue between two human persons.

“Conversation is a two-way street,” he said, “and if prayer is conversing with God, prayer should also involve a two-way dialogue.

“The unique and special self-revelation of God is found . . . in Sacred Scripture. The Bible is to be approached not merely as another spiritual meditation book, but as the expression of God himself.”

Vice Squad Detective to Enter Ministry

ATLANTA, GA. (EP) — Detective J. J. Turner is leaving the Atlanta police vice squad to study for the ministry.

His partner, Clarence Bailey, left the ministry to join the vice squad.

Detective Turner, a former high school and navy athlete, will attend the Church of Christ Sunset School of Preaching in Lubbock, Texas, hoping to complete the usual four-year course in two years by attending classes twelve hours a day. His wife will accompany him.

He commented on the unusual change in his life’s work: “After seeing every side of life and raising my own share of sand in the navy, I feel like becoming a preacher of the gospel. There is a need there I hope and pray I can fill.”

Methodists Reorganize Missions Structure

NEW YORK CITY (MNS)—Four previously separate structures within The Methodist Church will be merged into The Methodist Board of Missions at an organizational meeting September 14-18 in Chicago.

By vote of the 1961 General Conference, the World and National Missions Divisions, plus the Woman’s Division of Christian Service and the Joint Section on Education and Cultivation, will become units of the Board of Missions.

The General Conference voted last spring that in staffing the new board at least 40 percent of the executive positions must go to women; that Christian nationals overseas must be “considered” for staff jobs; and that all positions must be filled without regard to race.
