There is No Place for Jealousies in Enforcement of Law

Washington, July 26.—(U.P.)—J. Edgar Hoover began his 21st year with the department of justice today by calling for mobilization of every branch of the nation's law enforcement agencies to fight 4,000,000 criminals.

He stressed a need for fullest cooperation between the agents of the federal bureau of investigation and local officers, some of whom have been plagued at times by "Lone Wolf" methods of the underworld.

In an exclusive interview with the United Press, Hoover praised local officers for their part in the success attained in the campaign against white slavery, kidnaping, bank robbery and other crime. He invited their aid in an internal assault on the underworld.

"There is no place for jealousy in law enforcement in the United States," the 42-year-old G-man stressed. "The public is not interested in who catches the criminal, but it is interested in seeing that he is caught."

Hoover declared that the only instances in which the FBI had refused to co-operate with local authorities have been those in which the bureau has been honestly, inefficiently or a publicity officer within the local agency.

Local police officers are neither "left feet nor right feet," he said. "The most part, they are courageous and loyal men trying to do an honest job."

Hoover believes that inefficiency in law enforcement officers is caused either by lack of training or "the alms of the underworld."

He entered the department of justice in 1917 as a law clerk and was made a special assistant to the attorney general in charge of deportation cases.

In 1921 he became assistant director of the FBI—then known as the division—and in 1924 was named director.
