1-1-2004

Howard "Butch" Wheeler

Stephen Lowe
Olivet Nazarene University, slowe@olivet.edu

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.olivet.edu/hist_fACP

Part of the American Popular Culture Commons

Recommended Citation
http://digitalcommons.olivet.edu/hist_fACP/12

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the History at Digital Commons @ Olivet. It has been accepted for inclusion in Faculty Scholarship - History by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Olivet. For more information, please contact kboyens@olivet.edu.

Wheeler possessed a tall, lean frame and skillfully used it to become one of the longest hitters of the golf ball ever. He claimed his first tournament victory in the 1931 Atlanta Open. Two years later, Wheeler won his first United Golf Association national championship. Throughout his long career, Wheeler added five more UGA national titles; he won for the second time in 1938, then captured three in a row from 1946-1948, and finally won again in 1958. In the midst of those national title victories, Wheeler also collected his share of minor events, such as the 1951 Joe Louis Invitational. Wheeler’s career peaked in the late 1940s, when he rivaled Ted Rhodes as the country’s top African American golfer. Unlike Ted Rhodes, Bill Spiller, or Charlie Sifford, however, it seems that Wheeler never made any serious effort to challenge the policies of the Professional Golfers Association’s tour, instead remaining content to shine as arguably the brightest star in black professional golf in the early post-World War II period.

Stephen R. Lowe